THE Friars Point (Miss.) Gazette has the following "complimentary" remarks to make about Memphis: "Memphis should pull in her horns. With all her bragging about her manufacturing enterprises she had no facilities to repair a broken steamboat shaft, and the Kate Adams had to send to New Albany to have her repairs made. It is a disgrace to Memphis." To which the Aberdeen (Miss.) Examiner replies: "Not such a disgrace, friend Gazette. The forging of a shaft for a steamboat or steamship is one of the heaviest undertakings conceivable, and involves investment in trip-hammers and other huge contrivances in the way of boatinvestment in trip-hammers and other huge contrivances in the way of boat-building 'plant' such as few cities can boast. We doubt very much whether a shaft can be forged—or repaired except temporarily—at any ports on the Mississippi river except St. Louis and New Orleans, while on the other hand, New Albany, Ind., is one of the leading steamboat-building towns in America, having six ship-yards and six huge foundries, and doing the greater part of the boat-building and repairing for the trades of the Ohio, Mississippi, Missouri and their tributaries."
